I'm enjoying comedian and actress Marilyn Michaels' memoir, "How Not To Cook for the Rest of Your Life." Michaels landed the role of Fanny Brice in the national tour of "Funny Girl" in 1965. She became pals with Barbra Streisand, who originated the part on Broadway. But during a joint interview, Streisand bristled when the reporter aimed his questions at Michaels because her answers made him laugh. "That short-circuited our budding friendship real quick!" Michaels writes. Her memoir is breezy and funny — a good summer showbiz read.

MM as Brooke w/ Bubble Gum... all about the Playboy shoot in HOW NOT TO COOK....

THE MANSION

Hef came out to greet me in silk PJ's—he was very friendly, unassuming and a bit childlike. The place was overrun with celebrities and beautiful women. There was no use wondering if you measured up...you didn't. Everyone was a 10. I mean, in the days before I had a baby, I looked pretty good, but it was like the old line: "Did you ever feel that the whole world was a tuxedo, and you were a pair of brown shoes?"

TRAVEL

I don't wanna hear the words: "It's just a little turbulence." Years ago on a flight to Vegas we started to nose dive, and everyone began to scream and cry out for "Mama!"... which is something I do without losing altitude...just like I don't forget the pain of childbirth. I remember every contraction. Whenever I had one, I would tell myself, "Stupid, remember this."

NANNIES

I don't believe women should raise their children by themselves. It's the real reason mothers set their babies afloat in a basket on the Nile. How do you think Moses started out?...an over extended mother!

...these 3 ladies are in HOW NOT TO COOK... and they are ALL MM

“Amy Schumer, who just married a chef, might have been inspired by Marilyn Michaels’ new tome, “How Not To Cook, for the Rest of Your Life.” Michaels suggests you forget doctors and lawyers. “The only way to get out of cooking is to marry the chef with the tallest hat.”

Revivifying the Fine Art of Paragraphing!

Patricia L. Robinson-Linder

In the 1970's, when many of us had answering machines attached to our landlines, I purchased a couple of tapes of Marilyn Michaels and Rich Little performing as other people, supplying brief quips for callers, and ending frequently with some witticism, such as "You KNOW what to do at the sound of the beep" in Barbra Streisand's or someone else's voice. I loved them and wore out the tapes. They also made me a fan of Marilyn Michaels and, ultimately, I saw her perform in person and watched her whenever practicable on television. She was classic "fun," and we have so little of that in culture now. I also started to read her books and since I love autobiographical sketches – and still teach them – I invested in "How Not to Cook for the Rest of your Life" and have not been disappointed. Candidly, our standards of good literary reads exclude comic work, and the art of "paragraphing" apparently died with Bill Vaughan/Burton Hillis, but you can make room for this one because it is hilarious and part of an old-fashioned genre (think of a silly Emily Dickinson), which imparts bursts of insight in every short section. It also reads in a "stream of consciousness" style, which is really fine since comic paragraphing is becoming a lost art anyway. The endeavor is not a cookbook, but a reflection on how themes of food and its preparation of it – or indeed the non-preparation of it – allows the writer to confront all kinds of issues she has faced in a successful career doing comedy of her own. There are a few surprises, such as the sense she enjoyed the attentions of many men prior to the "Me, too" and "Time's Up" movements when I avoided them as often as I could, but the book is, overall, congenial. It is Michaels's highs and lows distilled to a delicious elixir!

I bought this wonderfully funny book this morning

By Roscoe

...laugh-out-loud stories concerning herself, her musical family (Her dad sang bass with the Metropolitan Opera Company) and dozens of celebrities (also funny) with whom she had dined on stage and off through the years. After a morning, and an afternoon, and evening, I was happily sated.

WHILE EXAMINING THE SUBJECT OF FOOD, THIS IS NOT A COOKBOOK!

By William C. Montague

Marilyn Michaels and Mark Wilk have managed to write a modern-day classic that will entertain anyone with a sense of humor. It is a full-blown guide not just covering the subject of food, but also, a host of issues to form a rather complete picture of a new lifestyle.

Fun to read

By Joanne Engel

I absolutely love this book! you don't have to be in show business to enjoy Marilyn's memoirs....the book is literally a laugh a paragraph. You will thoroughly enjoy it.

It's brilliant!! My stomach still aches from laughing so hard and wasn't from the cooking.

I've read it twice! GET IT NOW! Like TODAY!

By MusicMan

Ever wanted to hire a personal chef? If so, then get this how-to, who's-who, fall-down-funny-laugh-a-second "anti-cook book") read it and you'll know what that means). It's full of terrific anecdotes, stories about some very famous people, insights into show biz, and tips on how to live a muc, much better life. Marilyn is not just one of the funniest comedians ever, but a great humor writer, too (along with her very talented son, Mark Wilk!) Okay - go out and get this book right now. No wait - get two or three - give them to your friends, give them as gifts and they will love you because, like me, they will belly laugh out loud! Another thought - give a few to your enemies - they'll die laughing.

DELICIOUS!

By Marian Hailey

What a clever way to do a memoir. I can learn about this genius of a talent in vignettes. I can have an appetizer or a full meal of laughter and insight into Marilyn's life. Just like her performances one is transported. Marilyn Michaels and Mark Wilk have teamed up to give us an unforgettable experience.

Although it's not really about cooking... this book REALLY cooks!

By gooddoc

I brought my copy along to my hair appointment today; a 4 hour long extravaganza stuck in a small salon with too many women and a lot of hairsprays fumes. Within a few paragraphs, I knew that I was in for one wild ride... I had to stop over and over again to try and compose myself from laughing so hard. Tears were running down my face threatening to ruin my makeup. Soon my mother joined in the laughing and then the whole place became giggly and joyous. When someone is having a great time, it's contagious! Learning How NOT to Cook Never Tasted Funnier.

I devoured Marilyn's book in less than 2 days. I could not put it down until the very last "drop". Her adventures in life and show business were like satisfying tidbits served up for our delectation. The chapters are short, breezy, light-hearted, and a great summer read. I found myself wanting more...who doesn't when it's so good

Marilyn Michaels "cooks" up a winner!

Format: Paperback

This hilarious romp is as funny as Marilyn Michaels is talented- which means it is an incredible book! Her writing style is so conversational, her stories so engaging and charming, that you want to be able to hang out with her over a lunch or dinner (take-out, of course). This amazing comedienne, singer, actress and impressionist is equally adept at writing. This is a must read for fans of Marilyn, for fans of not cooking, for fans of reading, and for anyone still breathing! Mangia!

Best comedic memoir!
